FARMING AS A QUESTION OF PROFIT. In a late article we spoke of the need of a class of small farmers, principally in regard to relieving the cities of their over-crowded population. We now propose to show how a small farm, as a source of profit, compares with the less productive pursuits in cities and towns. We will suppose a small farmer to hold the same relative position to a large agriculturist that a clerk does to his employer. And we will take as the supposed rate of the clerk's salary, one thousand dollars. For some of our facts and data we draw up n an article communicated by Mr. Wilson Flagg to the New England Farmer. There is a difference in advantages between a New England and a Pennsylvania farm, which in some regards is in favor of New England, in others in lavor of our own latitude. If our farmers have more productive land, they are less careful in husbanding its proceeds, and converting them to money. What a New England farmer can do, even on Cape Cod, a prementory which is a proverb for sterility, is shown in a statement made by the Provincetown Banner, Mr. Thomas F. Small raised, on seven acres, articles which sold for $375. These cash products were milk, beets, potatoes, turnips, and cabbages, and, of course in addition to the cash, he had all that was necessary of the same articles for his own order to the Babylonish Captivity, containing consumption. Besides these were the follow- more than fifty of the most sublime and intering crops used for his own household and esting scenes in the Bible. for his stock; corn, one hundred bushels. $100; beans, ten bushels, $2250; carrots, two hundred bushels, $50; pumpkins, $20; eggs and fowls, $75; pork $50. Here is an aggregate of about $700 which can be counted .-Add to this, rent and the thousand advantages which cannot be computed, but in the city would have required the actual outlay of money, and we may assume the products of Mr. Small's seven acres at $1200. The whole labor, with the exception of about one day's work at a dollar and a quarter, was done by Mr. Small and a lad twelve years of age. Of course, his women worked in door, and perhaps, gave a turn at the garden. No debts, no duns, no bank notices, and no protests disturb Mr. Small. The value of his

This, by the way, is an admore use of her steam roads than we have done, and her business population cover an area the radius of which may be stated at twenty miles. We may, however, assume that one hundred and fifty dollars, at the least, is expended in travelling and excur sions to get a spiff at the free air, which the farmer has for nothing. Three bundred dellars out, leave the thousand dollar clerk, office holder, or other salaried man, seven hundred dollars only for all expenses. If out of health, or out of employment, he is reduced to absolute want, a danger from which the farmer, with the same income, is comparatively

If our agricultural districts were in the hands of small holders, receiving liberal wages from nature's profusion, in fresh air, fresh food and health, none of which go into statistical tables, the city would be relieved from the struggling genteel poor, and from the youthful indigent population growing up in idleness and vagrancy. Our agricultural districts do not support people enough. And they cannot be expected to do it while lab rere demand enormous wages, or in default fall back coolly and impudently upon the public charities, or rob the humane on the Japanese plan of compulsion.
